> Recent experiments in Japan on the subject of the penetration of ships' decks by vertical fire tend to confirm the results originally arrived at in the course of German experiments at Meppen. The Germans obtained B per cent. of hits at range of about 3,700 yards, the Japanese 6 per cent, at a very similar range; in each case a portion of a deck only, some fifty feet by seventeen, was fired at. It is e timated that, with a ship of average dimensions, 20 per cont. of hits at about two miles could be attained; that is, one shot it five would probably strike a vessel anchored two miles from a fart mounting mortars, howitzers, or heavy guns for vertical fire.
